The wets of Illinois are determined that the people of that state shall vote on the whiskey question this fall. They think the vote will be so overwhelmingly against it that it will encourage other states to a like move and finally result in a modification in favor of light wines and beer.

Senator "Jim" Reed, of Missouri, has opened his campaign for re-election. He assails the recently enacted tariff and declares for a "reasonable" modification of prohibition laws. Will some one tell us what "reasonable" means? It is a fine catch phrase, but it means something or nothing as one may choose.

Senator Frelinghuysen, of New Jersey was nominated by a vote of two and a half to one over his wet opponent. He has declared for strict enforcement of the Volstead act with no weakening of the law in any way. This is the state of Gov. Edwards, who said he would make the state as wet as the Atlantic ocean.

Wilbur Brookhart was in from Peavine Saturday and was accompanied home by his brother, G. F. Brookhart, for a brief visit with home folks.

Prof. A. Boyce, treasurer, and Prof. Paul A. Wilson, Principal of Pleasant Hill Academy, were over from Pleasant Hill Monday in company with F. L. Brownlee, of the home office, New York.

The average wage in thirteen industries in Japan is 95 cents a day for a laborer. How would American laborers feel if an effort was made to reduce their wages to that level? Most American laborers get more than half that much an hour.

That shows one of the necessities for a protective tariff in this country, unless we wish the Jappy to make our goods and our factories shut down.

There is no effective answer to the remark of Chairman Adams of the Republican National Committee that there cannot possibly be any higher cost of living than that of being out of a job. A protective tariff never puts Americans out of employment.

REV AND MRS. J. H. SNOW WILL DO MISSION WORK, KNOXVILLE.

The Baptists of Knoxville have just purchased a piece of property in a favorable location in Knoxville and will open a regular mission service under the direction of Rev. J. H. Snow and wife.

Rev. and Mrs. Snow will be very pleasantly remembered by many in Crossville and over the county as he was pastor of the Baptist church here, and while so acting he preached at several points over the county so that he became quite well known. They are both earnest and consecrated Christian people, have had wide experience in church work and will doubtless render very effective service.

AGRICULTURAL AND LIVE STOCK LOANS AVERAGE NEARLY MILLION A DAY

The War Finance Corporation has made a report of its operations up to and including August 15, 1922.

Congress amended the War Finance Corporation August 24, 1921, so that it could loan money to banking institutions, live stock loan companies and co-operative associations for agricultural and live stock purposes. From the date of its amendment to August 15, 1922, which are nine days short of a year, the War Finance Corporation loaned for agricultural and live stock purposes $346,923,826.

This is only a little short of $1,000,000 a day, that this corporation has loaned to farming and live stock interests since Congress gave it power to make such loans. However, the above total does not include applications of co-operative marketing associations totaling $72,500,000 for loans to assist them in financing the marketing of this year's crops as soon as the crops are harvested. The corporation has approved of these applications and the money will be advanced as soon as the need for it arrives.

During the year Tennessee has received loans amounting to $3,796,412.11.

CAPT. PECK TALKS ABOUT

Cover Crops and Subsoiling

Talks to Farmers by T. F. Peck, Commissioner of Agriculture.

Now is the time for seeding of winter cover crops of rye, crimson clover, vetch etc., and I hope the farmers of Tennessee are realizing the importance and value of the winter cover crop. It will prevent land from washing if seeded in time to get well established before cold weather. It will furnish winter pasture when the soil is dry enough, to pay for the cost of seed and preparation of seed bed.

If stock is removed before the spring growth starts it will materially increase the humus in the soil, if turned under, and, if crimson clover is seeded add from sixty to seventy-five pounds of nitrogen to the acre. Land should not be left bare during the winter, and there is no excuse for doing so when so much can be done to increase its productivity, and that will be profitable.

The winter cover crop is not an experiment. Its value has repeatedly been demonstrated, so that farmers in every community should know. If we neglect to do these things, the responsibility is upon our own shoulders.

Now, is also the best time of the year for sub-soiling, to get the best results. I have heretofore discussed the value and importance of subsoiling, when and how it should be done, but it is a subject of great importance and will bear repetition. Many are now subsoiling who did not practice it a few years ago. Still there are thousands who are trying to make a living by scratching a few inches of the surface soil, with a hard pan just beneath that is impervious to water and which roots of plants cannot penetrate, and the plant food in it is dormant.

Shallow preparation of land causes it to wash easily and give up its scant supply of humus more readily. I have bought what was called wornout farms and in two years had them producing good crops. They had been broken shallow and the surplus water which the soil could not absorb, carried away the vegetable matter, leaving the surface soil hard to pulverize and easy to bake. When I got hold of such a place at this season of the year I would hitch one team to a turning plow and set the plow so that it would run as deep as the ground had been broken. With another team to a subsoiling plow I would follow in the furrow of the turning plow, having the subsoil plow set just deep enough to get under the hard crust and break it up. This is better than to set the subsoiling plow too deep. I try to have a green crop to turn under. This puts the vegetable matter in the broken up subsoil, the winter rains and frosts reach it and disintegrate it and release the dormant plant food.

In the spring I want to mix and pulverize the soil deep enough to reach the subsoil. I increase the vegetable matter by growing a winter cover crop of rye, vetch or clover in combination; the legume stores nitrogen in the soil. When possible I apply two tons of ground limestone per acre.

The important feature I want to emphasize is that now, while the subsoil is not wet is the best time to do subsoiling. The subsoil should have the rains and frosts of winter to disintegrate it. Subsoil should never be thrown to the surface when subsoiling. Land that is subsoiled at the right time and in the right way will double the yield of crop; if rightly cultivated it will not wash. It will retain more moisture and stand drouths where land not subsoiled would fire.

Subsoiling can be done by the small farmer as well as by the man who farms on a larger scale. No expensive equipment is necessary. Some farmers say they cannot subsoil their whole farm; that they are not able to do it. It is true he cannot do it all in one season, but any farmer can subsoil a few acres each year, and in that way the whole farm can be subsoiled and will be rendered more productive and more easily cultivated.

It is not the lack of knowledge of how to do things that is the trouble with many farmers, but the trouble is to get them to do what they know should be done and can do. We can climb a ladder only one rung at a time. We should do our best, and if we do that we will find that we are on the road to success and prosperity.
